Who Inhabited Dakhleh Oasis? Searching for an Oasis Identity in Pharaonic Egypt

Catherine Hubschmann
Monash University, Melbourne, Australia

A variety of textual and pictorial sources demonstrate that the inhabitants of Dakhleh Oasis were considered different from the people who lived in the Nile Valley. The archaeological profile of this oasis, however, displays nothing that is identifiable as non-Egyptian. This paper discusses why such an evidentiary inconsistency exists by examining contextual issues that contribute to the manifestation of identity in the archaeological record. Current theories on the identification of ancient identities are adapted to what is known of Dakhleh Oasis to demonstrate that the lack of non-Egyptian material culture does not necessarily equate to a population in Dakhleh Oasis that is homogeneous with the Nile Valley.

Keywords
Ancient Egypt, Dakhleh Oasis, Identity, Nile Valley, Oasis-dwellers.

The Nile Valley, Dakhleh Oasis and the Oasis-dwellers
The community of ancient Egypt comprised peoples who shared a common language and culture, who were ruled by a divine royal lineage and who occupied rigidly-defined

Владимир Еременко о сайте и о себе

Коллектив, разрабатывающий сайт, состоит из одного человека. Сайт никогда не получал грантов или субсидий и целиком содержится мною на собственные средства. Все опубликованные на сайте тексты и ссылки присланы их авторами или найдены в сети открытого доступа.

Пусть кто-то заботится о гонорарах авторов и доходах издательства, другой - о том, чтобы размещенные в сети работы считались официальными публикациями, третий - о рекламе российских научных работ для европейской аудитории или и вовсе о "продвинутом" дизайне.

В мои задачи все это не входит. Я лишь по мере сил содействую расширению "зоны чистого разума" в той части обитаемого мира, которая думает или хотя бы говорит или читает на русском языке и интересуется археологией. Насколько хорошо это получается - судить Вам

Bones, stones and genes

the new science of human evolution

A new BBC documentary presented by Alice Roberts has been charting the spread of modern humans across the globe. Is it really true that we are all Africans? Current Archaeology assesses the latest evidence.

Left This is the face of the first known modern European – based on a 40,000-year-old Homo sapiens skull found at Vindija in the Carpathian Mountains, Romania. Traditionally known as the ‘Cro-Magnons’ – after the site in France where early sapiens fossils were first found in Europe – they shared the continent with the Neanderthals for up to 10,000 years.

Somewhere in Africa, about 200,000 years ago, lived a woman. She was a modern human, and we call her ‘African Eve’. Every single human being on the planet today is her direct descendant.

That is the astonishing conclusion of the new science of palaeo-genetics. The long debate between advocates of the rival theories of ‘Out of Africa 2’ and ‘multi-regionalism’ seems to have tipped decisively in favour of the former.

There had always been agreement about ‘Out of Africa 1’: the theory that archaic humans first evolved in Africa and then spread across Eurasia during climatic warm periods. All humans belong to a single family of ‘hominins’ or ‘hominids’ (both terms are used). The hominins evolved out of an advanced species of archaic African ape (one of the australopithecine family) approximately 2.5 million years ago.

Below The election of America’s first black president was a political sensation, but it should not have been, as race does not exist: we are all a single African species. That is the conclusion of the latest palaeo-genetics, popularised in the BBC’s documentary series The Incredible Human Journey, presented by Alice Roberts.

Viking treasure looters found guilty

Tuesday saw the conclusion of a groundbreaking trial against five men charged with aggravated crime against relics following the looting of Viking age coins and artefacts on the Baltic island of Gotland.

“This verdict is unique. It is the first time that anyone has been found guilty of aggravated crime against relics since the law was made more severe on these cases in 1991,” said Marie-Louise Hellqvist of the County Administrative Board (Länsstyrelsen) to local paper Gotlands Tidningar.

In November last year the police recovered a silver treasure dating back to the 11th century stolen from a field in Gandarve, Alva on Gotland in 2009.

STS.467 Research Seminar in Deep Sea Archaeology | Science, Technology, and Society

STS.467 examines the intellectual foundations of archaeology in the deep sea. The course explores the current convergence of oceanography, archaeology, and engineering which allows scientists to discover, survey, and excavate shipwrecks in deep water with robots and submarines. The course seeks to address the following questions: How are new devices best employed for archaeological work? How do new capabilities (e.g. higher frequencies, higher resolution, all digital data output) change operations plans and research designs? What new technologies will be required? Area studies focus on the Aegean in Minoan times and western Sicily during Phoenician, Greek, and Roman hegemony.

3.986 The Human Past: Introduction to Archaeology | Materials Science and Engineering

This class introduces the multidisciplinary nature of archaeology, both in theory and practice. Lectures provide a comparative examination of the origins of agriculture and the rise of early civilizations in the ancient Near East and Mesoamerica. The laboratory sessions provide practical experience in aspects of archaeological field methods and analytical techniques including the examination of stone, ceramic, and metal artifacts and bone materials. Lab sessions have occasional problem sets which are completed outside of class.

The following table lists readings associated with the lectures, along with a few "extraneous" background readings. Some additional readings are also given on the labs and assignments pages.

Readings for this class fall into two categories, 1) required readings that provide a basic framework for and amplification of the lecture materials, and 2) optional supplemental readings which provide direct exposure to the primary specialist research that archaeologists undertake or utilize in their research. The required readings include a textbook, a modest number of journal articles/papers and a larger number of abstracts from scientific papers.

The optional supplemental readings are, for the most part, the original scientific papers from which the abstracts were derived.

Kulture bakarnog i ranog bronzanog doba na tlu Srbije

Dragoslav Sreјović

Izvor: Istorija srpskog naroda I, Srpska književna zadruga, Beograd, 1994.

U poslednjim stolicima 4. milenija pre nove ere klima se u celoj Evropi osetno izmenila. Zbog pada temperature i smanjenja vlažnosti vazduha, šume su se prorodile, dok su se površi obrasle travom, šibljem ili trskom znatno proširile. Promena opšte klime snažno je delovala i na osnovne izvore sirovina i hrane. Drvo, posebno hrast i brest, postaje na nekim područjima retkost, mnoge životinjske vrste menjaju mesto boravka, a ranije plodno zemljište pretvara se na mnogim mestima u pustare. Uporedo s krupnim promenama u prirodi, iz osnove su se izmenile i tradicionalne kulture u svim delovima Evrope. Ritam, kao i smer tih promena nije, međutim, bio jednobrazan. Brzo i uspešno izmenila se kultura samo onih područja čije se privređivanje nije zasnivalo na zemljoradnji a društvo na rodovskom uređenju, jer je preobražaj prirodne sredine iziskivao od ljudskih zajednica veću pokretljivost, te je zbog toga pogodovao jedino razvoju stočarstva, zanatstva i trgovine, tj. nomadskom ili gradskom životu.^[1] Sve zajednice koje su ostale privržene predačkoj zemlji i tradicionalnim društvenim odnosima našle su se brzo na marginama kulturno-istorijskih zbivanja. Njihovu sudbinu delile su i zajednice na teritoriji Srbije tokom celog bakarnog doba.

Više od jednog milenija, približno od 3200. do 2000. godine pre n. e., zajednice u kontinentalnim delovima Balkanskog poluostrva nalazile su se u procepu između dva novonastala sveta, podjednako snažna ali potpuno različita, između agresivnih
